Agenda Item	Presentation of 2006-07 Annual Report on Eliminating Underage Drinking in Utah
Notes	Doug Murakami, Director of Alcohol Education for the Utah Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, reported in 2006 the Legislature passed the Eliminate Alcohol Sales to Youth (E.A.S.Y.) law. The bill created two funding streams: funding for the law enforcement compliance check program, and funding for a statewide underage drinking prevention media campaign. Doug said a key goal of the media campaign is to get the entire community involved in preventing underage drinking. The core of the campaign is the new research on

	the effects of alcohol on the developing teen brain. The campaign also informs parents about early addiction issues. The television ads created for the campaign were shown to the Council. Helen Knipe, Program Specialist for the Department of Public Safety's Highway Safety Office, reported on the alcohol compliance checks being conducted in grocery and convenience stores. The goal of these checks is to curtail the retail supply of alcohol to minors, while the media and education campaign is targeting the social supply. She said E.A.S.Y. provides reimbursement to local law enforcement agencies for conducting alcohol compliance checks throughout the state. Before the legislation was passed, a lot of jurisdictions did not have the necessary funding to initiate and sustain these programs. Law enforcement agencies are allowed to conduct up to four compliance checks per year at each retail outlet. Helen also reported retailers go through training that arms them with the information and knowledge they need to refuse sales to minors. More than 27,000 individuals completed training in FY 2007 and all of these names have been manually entered into a database maintained by the Division of Substance Abuse and Mental Health.

He noted total community mobilization is the only way to accomplish an effective prevention strategy. Verne also reported UPAC is very interested in the Underage Drinking Prevention Media Campaign, which is kicking off its second year today. This campaign is bringing awareness to parents about what they can do to help their children remain alcohol-free. Verne said they've met with the prevention coordinators around the state and have discussed upcoming events, which include "ParentsEmpowered Month" in January and town hall meetings on underage drinking in March and April. Treatment – Harold Morrill reported they have excellent attendance at their meetings. He said one of the primary roles of the Treatment Subcommittee is to review treatment statewide and promote ease of access; quality, evidenced-based practices; and cost-effectiveness of services. Harold noted legislators have attended their meetings to present proposed legislation. The subcommittee has also discussed the DORA project and the need for restorative dental care for recovering meth users.
